CITY OF OGDEN AND WASATCH MOUNTAINS

Name the states that border Utah.

East of the Great Salt Lake is the city of Ogden. It is 37 miles north of Salt Lake City. It is at the junction of the Ogden and Weber Rivers. These rivers furnish electric power and light for Ogden and Salt Lake City. Ogden has about 30,000 inhabitants and is located on one of the great transcontinental railway lines. It is one of the largest railway centers between Denver and the Pacific Coast. Beet sugar, canned vegetables and fruits and flour are the chief manufacturing industries. It has extensive railway shops. The city is surrounded by rich agricultural and grazing lands.

The view shows the way in which the city nestles at the foot of the mountain. You can tell from the part shown that the city is a modernly built, up-to-date city. Of what are the stores built? Are there many or few trees?

The Wasatch Mountains rise in the southeastern part of Idaho and extend across the state of Utah almost to the Colorado River. This range forms the eastern boundary of the Great Basin, including parts of Utah, Nevada, and Idaho. The mountains are rich in minerals, especially silver, lead, copper, coal and asphaltum. In the extreme south are vast fields of iron. South of Ogden the slopes of the mountains are covered with pine timber. Their average height is about 10,000 feet, but there are some peaks that rise 12,000 feet. The section of the range shown is barren of trees. You can see great scars across the face of the rock cliffs, showing where they have been eroded. Fruits of all kinds adapted to this climate grow in abundance.
